CPS America today announced the grand opening of their new business headquarters at a ribbon cutting ceremony in Somerville, New Jersey. Previously stationed in Morristown, New Jersey, CPS America expects to continue their growth in the Somerville area after posting the highest first half revenue in the company's history.

CPS America is in the Renewable Energy Industry, providing power electronics and service to over 20,000 solar plants and helping to add thousands of construction jobs across the United States. Over the last 7 of 8 years, CPS America has held the number #1 market share in 3-phase string inverters. CPS America 3-phase string inverters are used on nearly 1 of every 2 commercial solar projects using 3-phase string inverters.

To CPS America, the Somerville area is seen as a key factor in the company's future success.

"In the past year our team has grown exponentially, and that couldn't have been done without the local, homegrown talent we've been able to find," said Bryan Wagner, President and GM of CPS America. "As a community member myself, I recognize the importance Somerville has in CPS America's continued success," he added. Bryan Wagner has been a member of the Somerville community for many years, with both his children going to the Immaculate Conception School in Somerville, New Jersey. Baseball games with the Somerset Patriots, a Double A Minor League baseball team affiliated with the New York Yankees, have been a staple in both his and the CPS America family's lives. "The Somerset Patriots have been an invaluable partner with CPS America, hosting multiple events with our company over the last few years," elaborated Bryan Wagner. "It's just one of the many ways we've been able to foster meaningful relationships with local businesses."

Like Bryan Wagner, many CPS America employees work with the local community. Service Communications Matt Markiewicz, an alumnus of Immaculata High School in Somerville, New Jersey, coaches youth baseball in Somerset County. CPS Partner videographer Joey Raymundo, a graduate of Bridgewater High School, has built his company Media X Marketing within Somerville. New Jersey universities such as Rutgers and other universities, known for their strong renewable energy program, have provided numerous employees and interns to CPS America.

Currently CPS America has brought 20 jobs to Somerville and plans to have more than 50 employees from the area in the coming year. CPS America's hiring plan follows the company's goal of growing together with the local community.
